SWEET CLOVER.

Recently there has developed a widespread interest in the production of sweet clover for soil improvement, pasturage and hay. Many inquiries are received regarding the best variety to plant, methods of seeding, handling of the crop, etc. This circular is prepared by the Department of Development to supply this information to farmers living along the Frisco Lines.

Varieties.

There are several varieties of sweet clover, but only two are of importance for general production in this territory. These are commonly known as white and yellow. The plants of the two varieties are very similar, but the flowers are white and yellow, respectively; hence, the names. Some sections prefer the white variety, while others prefer the yellow. From present indications, it appears that the question of value between these varieties is largely one of individual preference.

Both varieties are biennial, requiring two years to grow and mature seed. After producing seed, the plant dies and where this crop is wanted on the same land for several years, it is necessary to sow the seed each year or permit at least a portion of the plants to mature and re-seed themselves.

Soils.

Sweet clover does best on the richer soils, but it makes a satisfactory growth on practically all types of soil. The one most essential requirement is that there be sufficient amount of lime in the soil to prevent it from becoming acid or sour. If lime is present in the soil, this crop seems to grow well on all types—from almost pure sand to hard clay. Once established, it is very drought resistant and will thrive in semi-arid sections where other clovers are a complete failure. This adaptability to such an extreme range of conditions makes it a very desirable crop to grow.

Preparation of Seed Bed and Seeding.

The same general methods of preparing the seed bed and seeding will apply to all parts of Frisco territory, except western Oklahoma. Special instructions are given for that territory.

Sweet clover requires a thoroughly compact seed bed. Only enough loose soil to cover the seed is necessary. It should not be sown on freshly plowed or cultivated land. If the ground is fairly clean usually all that is necessary is to sow the seed during the late winter when the ground is honey-combed with frost. The alternate melting and thawing will sufficiently cover the seed for germination. If thought necessary, a harrow may be run over the field after sowing. Where plowing is necessary, it should be done several months before seeding, to allow the soil sufficient time to settle. If the soil is loose, it should be harrowed and rolled until it is compact. Sweet clover may be seeded with wheat or oats, the same as red clover. However, experience so far indicates that best results are secured by seeding alone.

Hulled or unhulled seed may be obtained in the market. Both kinds are recommended. From 15 to 25 pounds of hulled seed are usually required to get a good stand, while the unhulled seed requires at least five pounds more per acre. Heavy seeding is required on account of the very hard seed coat, which prevents many of the seed from germinating the first year.

Preparing Seed Bed in Western Oklahoma.

Where plowing is necessary, it should be done sometime before seeding. The field should be thoroughly disced and harrowed until the seed bed is firm. If the seeding is to be done on land that was well tilled the previous year, the seed may be drilled in without any previous preparation. On high land inclined to be droughty, plant in rows thirty inches apart, so that the crop may be cultivated. Two pounds of seed will be enough for one acre when seeded in this way. On the lower lands, containing plenty of moisture, seed at the rate of ten or twelve pounds per acre. Be careful not to cover the seed too deep for germination.

Inoculation.

Sweet clover is a legume and does not thrive unless it is inoculated with sweet clover bacteria. Probably in most cases the bacteria are present in the soil, especially if sweet clover has been growing nearby. If one is not sure, however, it is well to apply two or three hundred pounds of soil from a place where this crop has grown or from an old alfalfa field. Alfalfa and sweet clover have the same kind of bacteria, and soil from an old field of either crop may be used to inoculate the other. The soil should be scattered over the field on a rainy day or late in the afternoon, and the ground should be immediately harrowed. Bright sunlight soon kills the bacteria if left exposed on the surface. If no soil is available, the pure culture may be obtained in the market, and if the directions are followed closely, good results can be secured.

Cutting for Hay.

With a fair season, sweet clover may be cut once the first year. This cutting should be done late in the fall when the crop has its maximum growth. Two cuttings and a seed crop may be obtained the second season. It should be cut just before the blooms appear, as after this stage the stems rapidly become coarse and woody. The last crop the second season should be allowed to go to seed especially if it is desired to keep the field in this crop. The plant dies after maturing seed, whether it is the first or second crop.

Pasturing.

Sweet clover makes excellent pasture for all kinds of stock. At first, they do not relish it, but once started, they develop an appetite for it. Enough stock should be kept on the clover to keep it well eaten down. The plant stools readily and when eaten down close continues to send out new shoots.
